And the altar of our Christian Eucharist is the earthly reflection, not so much of the cross of the sacrifice as of the throne of the Priest-King, the Mediator, the Intercessor between God and man. Still more, therefore, the breaking of the bread is the evidence of the undoubted certainty of the Resurrection of the Lord. I am sure that I have no need to emphasize this by reminding you of the place which this Sacrament occupies in the Church to-day. As one recalls the contrast of its extreme simplicity with the awful elaborations of the old idea, Jewish or pagan, of propitiatory sacrifices; as one realizes that this monument, aere perennius, which has outlasted and overlived all other monuments of the world (at least so far as its speaking significance is concerned); as one realizes that it is founded upon the elements of crumbling bread and evaporating wine; as we see how the reverence of Christian people everywhere has not only surrounded its celebration with all the richness of ritual and music and adornment, has put the Altar in the most high and honourable place in the Church, and declares the Holy Communion to be the central and highest act of Christian worship, in spite of the superstitions which have disfigured it, or the exaggerations which have distorted it, or the false philosophy that has first desecrated the mystery and then divided the matter of the Sacrament--in spite of...
