Barley and oats were grown more extensively, the former showing an increase of 128,500 acres, and the latter one of 173,000 acres; the area under oats was the largest recorded since 1904. Of the pulse crops, beans were reduced by 25,000 acres and peas increased by 18,000 acres. The area under potatoes showed an increase of 80,000 acres, or nearly one-fifth, and was about 10 per cent greater than the highest acreage previously recorded. There was an increase of 34,000 acres in the area under turnips and swedes; the area under mangolds increased by nearly 11,000 acres. The area of clover and rotation grasses was 90,000 acres less than in 1910, nearly all the reduction being in that, reserved for hay; in all the hay area was reduced by nearly 180,000 acres. From an agricultural point of view the year was characterized by the large number of orders and regulations issued by the various Government departments, with the object of increasing production, controlling supplies, and keeping down prices. One of the most important regulations was that under which the various county war agricultural committees were given power to enforce the proper cultivation of land and to take over a farm from the owner if in their opinion he was unable to work it properly. These committees were also given power to enforce the plowing of grass land as part of a scheme to increase the area under grain crops by 3,000,000 acres for the harvest of...
