Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from History of New Hampshire, Vol. 2 It should be remembered that France and England long contended for the possession of North America, somewhat as the English and Dutch have fought for South Africa, and as the English and Germans are now fighting in East Africa for the possession of coveted lands for their colonies. By building a walled and heavily fortified city at Quebec, France early controlled the St. Lawrence River and by means of that Lake Champlain and later the Great Lakes and the upper valley of the Mississippi River. Their plan was to confine the English to a strip of land along the Atlantic Ocean, east of the watershed, while they should control at least all that was drained by the two great rivers and their tributaries. Hence they built a chain of forts to defend possessions that had originally been opened up to them by Jesuit missionaries. Through the work of those missionaries they easily made alliances with various tribes of Indians, though the Mohawks, indeed the Six Nations, of New York,...
