Not illustrated. 1908 Excerpt: .of picric acid, used by the British government, may be placed in a die into which a punch descends with great force, or it may be placed on an anvil and given a mighty blow with a sledge hammer, but there will be no explosion. It may be mixed with gunpowder and the gunpowder exploded, but the lyddite will remain as before. You can use it to light a cigar, cook a meal, or boil water, but when exploded in the proper way its effects are simply terrible. Sir Andrew Noble confined lyddite in a cast-iron shell and exploded it in a chamber of steel. Afterwards he found a black mass in the chamber which he at first thought to be unconsumed carbon, but when he tested it with a magnet he found it was the cast-iron shell reduced to dust by the shock. A large...
